other matter which I want to refer to and any proceeding in the course that has been followed and by standing by the Government, the present result has been brought about, because circumstances did not demand increased railway facilities until last harvest. Before I left Ottawa for home last Session, I heard glowing accounts of the prospects of a bountiful harvest; these accounts were given in every letter. I received from the people there, and on the morning when the train reached Winnspeg and I pulled up the blinds in the ear I beheld splendid fields of growing wheat. From that early hour in the morning until twilight I saw nothing but field after field of the most promising harvest. It astonished me; I had never seen anything like it in my life. The reports sent by every man were of the prospection of the district, asking the construction of the construction of the district, asking the construction of the district, asking the construction of the district, asking the construction of the care of this pear that the them and motors at this late period.

Some hon. Members at the ife. The reports sent by every man were of the most glowing and hopeful character. Seeing the prospect ahead I arranged with the 1883, believing that there would be prespect ahead I arranged with the agricultural societies of my district to held a series of shows in the autumn in the several districts commencing at Moosomin and proceeding west, holding nine shows in all. When I arrived at that conclusion I wrote to the Minister of Railways and the Minister of Agriculture, asking them for free passes for newspaper men from the eastern Provinces. I also wrote to the Pacific Railway to build an exten- ing and coming, and the condition farmers, and they went into that sion of railway through a portion of was that they should give a true country that I represent, and and correct account of the country, their land under the promise that a after thinking the matter over carefully, I considered it was in the interest of my constituents for me to interfere with any project that was injuring the credit of the Canadian liquid the canadian between the country and there are the promise that a ferred that a content of the country arilway would go there in the near future. They have lived and worked hard there for five years, but still there is no railway accommodation for those men. They live injuring the credit of the Canadian Pacific Kailway, from whom we were expecting to get railway extension, and whose officers we met every day, and with whom we were receiving no competition in the resolutions then before the House. I may say further that up to that time there had not been grain enough raised in the country to half employ the Canadian Pacific Railway. I contend that they built the railway two or three years in advance of country that I represented was in a country where it costs a man Stlo, over and above the price obtained for his load, to market it with a team of oxen, and so it is impossible for them to raise wheat in that country. I promised the people that I would try and get them the railway. I may say that the late lamented Hon. Thomas White wrote a strong letter to those settlers, in which he told them that way two or three years in advance say further that up to that time there had not been grain comby raised in the country to half empty. ### Dwarfs of Olden Times.

buried in the ground in many different countries.

Whole acres of land in the State of Tennessee are thought to have been the burying grounds of a pigmy race that must have lived before the red Indian. It is said that about fifty years ago some one accidentally discovered there hundreds of little skeletons under the ground, the largest not more than nineteen inches long, and people knew by the shape of the teeth that these were the skeletons of grown-up persons. The coffins were made of four rough, flat stones, and were all placed in regular rows, about two feet down in the earth, the little people lying on their backs, their arms crossed on their breasts, and each one holding a sort of small stone jug; one of these skeletons were a neck-lace made of ninety-four pearl beads, and at a short distance from the burial place were found the ruins of what seemed to have been a very old town. Whether this account is authentic, I cannot say. Dwart-graves have also been found in Central America, and in some parts of Europe and Asia; and on an island near Scotland, called the led of Pigmies, is an oil ruined chapel, In whose small vaults a pigmy folk is found, whose beneaf to dever with his spaid up. In whose small vaults a pigmy folk is found whose bones the delver with his spade up throws.

In the time of the Roman Empire it was the usatom for rich people to buy dwarfs and keep them for pets. Julia, the niceo of Cesar Augustus, had a little favorite named Conopas, and a handmaiden, Andromeda, each of whom was only "two feet and a hand breadth high." Augustus himself was very fond of dwarfs, and used to send to all parts of the world for them: but he would not have any excepting those who were well-shaped, handsome and lively. He and his little pets used to play together in the palace; while listening to their pretty prattiling the great Emperor forgot his worldly cares. The Romans lad a cruel practice of making dwarfs by keeping young babies in wooden boxes to prevent their growing; and by the time the poor little creatures were a few years old they were worth a great deal of money.

In Egypt and Persia and Turkey, pet dwarfs had been kept from the very earliest times, and from those countries the fashion spread to Europe. In the city of Mantua, in Italy, there is in the Duke's palace a seite of six very small rooms with ceilings so low that a fall man cannot stand up under them two diny staircases led to these rooms, which are said to have been built for the Duke's dwarfs to live in. William. Duke of Normandy, the conqueror of England, had dwarf-pages, and it was the fashion among his nobles to have as many of these little creatures as they could get to wait on them and lend their horses in grand processions.—

Not infrequently the cections were hook-shaped and bed similar to a fish hook, which account for the difficulty in remov-them from the eye, into which they e been driven—the closing of the id and the rubbing which thought-ity followed, assisting to more firmly sed them in the cornea.

The most famous dwarf of olden times, was Philetas, who lived in Eypti three hundred years before Christ. When a grown man he was so small and light that he dared not go out of doors without having lead weights in his pockets lest he should be blown away. And yet he was a great poet, and so wise and learned and trustworthy that he was chosen by the King. Ptolemy Soter, to direct the studies of his soon Philadelphus, the heir to the throne. How queer it must have seemed to the young Prince to have such a mite for a teacher. Writers of that long ago time say that there was once a whole tribe of dwarfs living in 1dair, and that they rode about on sheep and goats, and cut down the corn with axes as if the corn heid were a great forest. Every winter whole flocks of eranes—those tall birds with long beaks—used to fly to India from colder lanks, and the dwarfs were found of picking up the birds' feathers, and what was worse, of stealing their ergs. This mads the cranes very angry, so that they utaked the robbers, and as the dwarfs would not run away, there was a terrible battle, where, Addison says, and the was the end of the dwarf nation.

This sounds rather like a fairy-tale, and perhaps it is not all true, but at the same time it is not impossible that a very small race of people lived long ago, indeed their bones have been found buried in the ground in many different countries.
